Fort Bliss and the Border Are Menaced, but the "Enemy" Is Routed.

Fort Bliss is safe, if not impregnable, for five troops of the 22d infantry not only defended it, but routed its attackers. It was all part of a little war game that was played out there Tuesday moraing while business men were just going over their morning mail.

There are some soldiers of the 22d camped at Washington park. A large force of a "foreign power" crossed the border from Mexico and almost routed them. Hurriedly a messenger was dispatched to Fort Bliss for aid. Five companies of the 22d, commanded by Capt. Isaac Newell, tied their shoestrings and started to the rescue. Down along the Isaac Newell, tied their shoestrings and started to the rescue. Down along the road that runs from the fort, just west of the reservation, they hurried at a pace that would have made tenderfeet wonder. Along the hard paved road they walked, advancing rapidly. Finally they reached the plant of the ELPaso Chemical and Fiber company. There they halted. Scouts had spied a large force of the "enemy" entrenched on a hill about one mile to the southeast. mile to the southeast.

This enemy had to be met and disposed of before the march could be continued on to Washington park, to rescue their comrades. Work must be quick and tertain. The men were placed in position. The pack mules were driven to the front and the machine guns unloaded and put in position. Almost immediately, within the flash of a second, the rata-ta-ta-ta, grrrrr, of the machine gun was heard. Then came the spit, spit, spat of the rifles. One, two three, an hundred of them, sang their song of defiance to the men entrenched on the hill.

The defenders of the fort scattered and each man picked out a place that afforded him shelter, stopped a while, and then crawled up the hillside to the place where the enemy was entrenched. The fire grew hotter, the air was filled

The fire grew hotter, the air was filled with smoke and the smell of powder. The lust for blood was in the heart of every man who loved his country.

"Enemy" Is Routed.

Along the trail were many dead and wounded (theoretically). On the hilltop the enemy still kept up its fight until finally the commander, Capt. Wm. M. Fassett, bade his men make their getaway as fast as possible. He and his two companies of the 22d, or what was left of them, scurried down over the left of them, scurried down over the hillside and refogmed on the south side and marched back toward Washington park. The defenders of Fort Bliss kent up their advantage and continued their march to the southeast and to the rescue of the troops at Washington park.

Blank cartridges were used, nobody was injured, not even an eventory was Tactical Rides by Officers.

Commissioned officers of the 224 have prepared for just such maneuvers as this by their weekly tactical rides each Monday under the guidance of Col. D. A. Frederick, commander of the regiment.

The officers ride to a given point, arrange for the carrying out of certain details and each one expresses his opinion. One of the officers lays out his plan of attack each week, and the others cri-

of attack each week, and the others cri-ticise it, express their opinion of low it should be done, and a practical school similar to that at the war college at Leavenworth, Kan., is carried For instance, Monday they played that hostile force was at Alamogordo. They were defending El Paso and an advance guard of the enemy had been seen by their scents at Tobin. They formed the patrol, issued orders and proceeded to annihilate the enemy in much the same fashion as they would in war.

TESTS MADE WITH NEW MACHINE GUNS

Two Guns of French Make Are Given Tryout on Rifle Range and Do Effective Target Work.

No one doubts the difficulty of finding a needle in a haystack, and none would doubt the ability of the machine gun platoon of the 22d regiment to mow down an enemy if he could see them at target practice.

Monday afternoon, on the rifle range at Fort Bliss, a test was made in zone firing and it proved most effective where the guns swept a prescribed area, 75 bullets striking the targets when the first 180 shots were fired, and 89 striking the big boards when 120 rounds were fired.

The test was conducted by Lieut. Frederick B. Terrell in command of the machine gun platoon of the 22d infantry. Two new guns of the Benet Mercie type a French machine gun, were given a test and proved their worth.

on the hillside, about 1700 yards from the firing point on the range, the targets were set. The front row was that far distant. Exactly 25 yards behind these were three more, another set was placed an equal distance behind these, and then a fourth row was arranged 25 yards behind.

The width was 25 yards and it was proposed to cover the zone with rapid fire and destroy the enemy supposed to be there, no one being able to see an enemy at that distance under such con-ditions. There was a brisk wind blowing off the mountain, but this did not in-erfere with the firing. Lieut. Terrell and the scouts, who had placed the targets, retired to a fence a quarter of a mile distant and waited for the grr of the gun, after having given the signal by wigwagging that all was ready for the shooting.

The first gun functioned perfectly after the range had been found, when one shot was fired. A steady pour of lead was thrown about the transfe strikend was thrown about the targets, striking them and some striking the ground and throwing up clouds of dust. Many of the bullets struck stones and the jackets were torn from them. Others struck themselves prickly pears, and tore right through without losing their jackets, much as they would tear through a human body. After the first test, Lieut, Terrell, accompanied by the state of the first test, Lieut, Terrell, accompanied by the state of the Herseld.
